

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The Wild Sheep Society of British Columbia (WSSBC) announces massive organizational changes

Victoria, British Columbia- October 1, 2021

There comes a time in every non-profits existence where they are forced to adapt and change if they truly want to move to the next level. Since it's inception in 1998, the WSSBC has been largely volunteer run. Seeing unprecedented growth in the last two years, the WSSBC is pleased to announce a massive re-structuring.

Effective immediately, Kyle Stelter will step down as President and will move to the newly created Chief Executive Officer (CEO) role, while Vice-President Korey Green will move up to the role of President.

"Being a part of such growth and support of our long time and new members is an incredible feeling. For the society to continue to expand, creation of this position was an essential step." said Kyle Stelter, WSSBC CEO. "I commend the Board of Directors for their forethought and leadership in recognizing this necessary change. I am looking forward to the future as the WSSBC continues to reach new heights, and to further expand our outreach and on-the-ground tangible results."

The WSSBC will continue to be managed by volunteer support, while the creation of this new role allows a large workload to come off these hard-working individuals.

"As anyone involved with a volunteer-run society will know, burnout is a real possibility. By bringing Kyle into this role, this will greatly reduce this threat. I am excited to continue to support the Society, our members and welcome this step wholeheartedly," added Korey Green, WSSBC President.
